

Luminox Dive Watches

Contributed by admin
Monday, 10 November 2008

Are you a diver, a swimmer, or even a fisherman who needs a good, reliable watch that you can trust to continue working when it gets wet or is submerged? You could spend $20,000 on a Rolex. But who has that kind of money for a watch? You could spend it better on some new dive equipment or a boat! Nobody needs to know what time it is that bad.

Instead of using your life savings to see the time when you are under water, why don't you take a look at Luminox Dive Watches instead? Luminox Dive Watches are made to withstand depths of up to 660 feet and the faces are colors that you can easily see in murky waters. Some models light up as well, but even if your hands aren't free to push the light button you can still see the bright faces of a Luminox Dive Watch.

Luminox Dive Watches are the official watch of the Navy Seals. If you want a durable watch on your dives, what better watch to wear than the same watch that the Navy Seals wear when they dive. If anybody can put a watch through its trials, a Navy Seal can.

Some of the other features you will find on different styles of Luminox watches are ratcheting bezels so that they can easily be turned with one, slippery hand in order to coordinate times. This is an important feature when diving with a group. If you aren't back on time, your boat may leave you behind. It's happened before on at least two occasions because the divers lost track of time. Don't let that happen to you!

The Navy Seal models of Luminox Watches have mineral glass face covers (called crystals) because they are scratch resistant and impact resistant, and stainless steel case backings with stainless steel screws holding them together. No rusting, not even with exposure to salty sea water.

The Luminox Watches look great, too. They can be worn for sport and for work, as well as for play or for a night out at a fancy restaurant. You don't have to have several watches for different occasions. One Luminox watch will do the trick.

Luminox Dive Watches come in ladies styles, too. What a great his and hers gift for the holidays, a gift for a couple graduating dive school, or honeymooners heading to famous tropical dive areas like the Galapagos Islands.